Reading Comprehension 2

(24 marks)

Read the following passage which is divided into two sections to help you. Then, answer the questions that follow each section.

Section 1

‘When do the children come?’ asked Dr. Maud Biggin without looking up and flicking over the pages of one of the many books open before her. The study was full of tables piled with books, photographs and boxes, which spread and spilled over on to the floor. (paragraph 1)

Dr. Maud was a short-sighted woman who never straightened her back, but moved about at the right height for consulting other books wherever she had laid them. If not reading, her attention was on the ground as if expecting that something very interesting might catch her eye there. She had spent much of her life digging up old cities and graves in deserts and hillsides, and had got into the habit of searching the ground for fragments. She could not bear a vacuum cleaner because it left her nothing to look at. If a chimpanzee were let loose in a shop to choose its own clothes it would choose much the same as she was wearing. (paragraph 2)

‘Ah! The dear children!’ replied her old friend Miss Sybilla Bun. ‘They arrive at tea-time. I have made a strawberry cream sponge for them. I hope they have healthy appetites. I am looking forward to seeing them eat.’ Miss Sybilla’s only remaining passion in life was food. (paragraph 3)

These two ladies had rented a house in the country beside a broad, slow-flowing river. Maud Biggin had chosen this remote and ancient dwelling because she was writing a book about archaeology. When she had settled in at the house and felt how much room there was to spare, she decided to invite three disadvantaged children to spend the summer there. (paragraph 4)

Section 2

‘Ah, here’s the taxi! Here they are!’ cried Sybilla Bun. ‘And ready for their tea I hope. Come in, children, come in.’

They stood shyly in a row. Ida was eleven, but small for her age. Oskar looked obstinate and smart. Lastly there was slim, eight-year-old Jo.

‘I thank you for your very kind invitation,’ nine-year-old Oskar said softly.

‘Come with me children and see your room,’ said Sybilla. (paragraph 5)

As they wound their way upstairs after her, the children were wide-eyed with surprise. They were to share a large room at the top of the house. It had windows on three sides, out of which they could see the river as if on a map. It looked smooth, sleepy and timeless. (paragraph 6)

‘What a lot of islands the river makes,’ said Ida, calling the others to look out of the side window. ‘We are on one, and I can see at least three others. We must go exploring and sail round them all. Perhaps we shall find one where nobody has ever set foot. Look at that island downstream. It looks beautifully wild.’ (paragraph 7)

‘Look at this house reflected in the water,’ said Oskar. ‘I can see us all looking out of the window, but our faces wiggle as if we were eating toffee.’ (paragraph 8)

The following morning after breakfast the children hurried down to the river. All three were keen to start exploring their surroundings. They climbed into a canoe that lay tugging gently on its mooring. Oskar took hold of the paddles. They drifted happily along, a twist of the paddle now and again by Oskar, being enough to keep them on a straight course. Presently the sun came out and beautifully warmed them and with the sun appeared another host of living things, butterflies, dragonflies, brightly coloured beetles and lizards. The canoe drifted to a standstill. (paragraph 9)
