

L-Università
ta' Malta

Dear colleague,

The University of Malta is pleased to announce that applications for the Master in Education for Sustainable Development (MESD) are now open. This course is of interest to all educators, especially those that have Sustainable Development issues close to their heart and particularly if one is actively engaged in promoting Education for Sustainable Development.

The MESD is open to anyone, but it offers particular tangible benefits for teachers. Under the current agreement, teachers may profit from quicker progression to higher salary scales if they opt for professional development on a voluntary basis. According to the new agreement teachers who accumulate 360 hours of self-sought continuous professional development will be able to progress to the next pay scale in six years instead of eight. The MESD fully satisfies these criteria.

Further information about the MESD course can be found in the attached poster and the links therein. Feel free to forward this message to anybody who may be interested in promoting education for sustainability.

Regards,

Prof Paul Pace
Director, Centre for Environmental Education & Research