Text 1: Audio

You are going to listen to a podcast called "Make the Grade".

Do you sometimes feel overwhelmed with all the work you have to do for school? Well, Kristen's here to help with this week's "Make the Grade".

Kristen: Look, we all know it's hard to get to sleep when there's so much to do. But here are some ideas for making the most of the sleep you do get. Long before you go to bed, avoid anything with caffeine. For example, coffee, tea, soda or chocolate. Even when not wired with caffeine, many of us lie awake trying to remember all the things we need to do the next day. So write a note to yourself about what you need to do tomorrow. No longer having to worry about forgetting, should let you relax. Try to aim for the same bedtime every night. That helps train your mind and body to get ready for sleep. And say no to technology as it gets close to bedtime. That means no phone calls, messaging, no computers, no TV, nada. That's because doing things like playing video games or watching TV can create chemical reactions in your body that prevent you from falling to sleep. And that can be a real nightmare. I'm Kristen here to help you "Make the Grade".

Text 2: Audio-visual

You are going to listen to and watch a video about a famous photographer.

Hi, I'm Brian Skerry, and I'm a photographer that specialises in marine wildlife. It's really been a dream come true for me to be able to be a National Geographic magazine photographer. Travel around the world and tell stories about whales, and dolphins, and sharks, and turtles, and all these great creatures. As an underwater photographer, we got to get in the water and get close, within a metre or two, and it's a testament to the animals that let us close. (whales singing). They have their own dialects, which we could essentially call languages. That's something really special. One picture that I made several years ago has become somewhat famous. And it's a picture of my assistant standing on the bottom next to a 45-foot-long, 70-tonne southern right whale. With this giant animal that was as big as a school bus, swimming with me on the bottom of the ocean, and allowing me to make these series of photographs. Most of the work that I do is with scientists who dedicate their lives to try and figure out the mysteries in the ocean. Over the years, I began to see a lot problems occurring in our world's oceans. One of the biggest problems for whales is entanglement from fishing gear. Whales and sharks swim through the water, and they get entangled in nets and lines, and buoys, and it can actually kill them if some sort of rescue doesn't occur. I think it's important that we understand the problems, in order to find solutions. It's not too late, we can solve these problems, but we have to know about them first, and then we have to work together to find answers.
